39% More Sales. 100% Digital.

Progressive strategy, partnership, and results at Terry Henricks Chrysler Dodge Jeep Ram.
Terry Henricks Chrysler/Dodge/Jeep/Ram proves that progressive strategy can complement timeless values, and increase sales in the process.

One of four Chrysler dealerships west of a busy Toledo, OH market, Terry Henricks continually faces stiff competition. Yet its strong reputation, deep business values, and commitment to customer service set it apart from the competition and drive lifelong relationships.

General Manager Garry Mosier sought to carry this longstanding belief in customer relationships into a progressive marketing strategy that attracted new business and increased the store’s overall online visibility.
Mosier turned to digital to transcend traditional tactics, amplify the dealership's sterling reputation, and position it for future success. “Nothing had changed in the 11 years before I arrived,” said Mosier. “The techniques used to reach the customer base had stayed the same. We needed something different.”

Moreover, Mosier viewed digital as a potentially transformative opportunity. “There’s a limit to what you can do with TV, radio, direct mail, billboards, and merchandise like placemats and coffee mugs,” said Mosier.

“Our customers are online. And with today’s online opportunities in advertising and campaigning, we could really extend our reach beyond any limits.”

Recognizing the branding potential of Facebook, Mosier invested in social marketing to reinforce his store’s values and bolster dealership loyalty and referrals.
The team’s “all in” digital investment led to across-the-board results—from increased digital traffic and engagement, to wider market penetration, and elevated sales. Since adopting its new digital strategy in May 2014, the dealership has experienced:

“Digital is the future, so it's great to see the website and advertising performance. But what most excites me is the increase in market reach. We looked at sales from varying zip codes and saw that more shoppers were coming from farther away. In a competitive market like Toledo, that really matters. Digital is helping me build a much bigger customer base.”
